We cannot tell from the time tables how fast we travel. The schedule time does not indicate the delays that must be made up by spuris between stations. The traveler who is curious to know just how fast he is going, and likes the stimulus of thinking that he is in a little danger, tany find amusement in taking the time between mile posts; and when these are not to be seen, he can often get the speed between mile posts; and when these are not to be seen, he can often get the speed very accurately by counting the rails passed in a given time. This may be done by listening attentively at an open window or door. The regular-clicks of the wheels over the rail-joints can usually soon be singled out from the other noises and counted. The number of rail lengtisp sased in twenty seconds is almost exactly the number of miles run in an hour.
